

Bridging the Knowledge-to-Action Gap: The Role of Translational Medical Humanities

Join BRIGHT for an exciting keynote lecture

Professor Eivind Engebretsen from University of Oslo, Norway, is giving a keynote lecture at Aarhus University on the role of translational medical humanities.

The challenge of translating knowledge into action in healthcare has traditionally been addressed through scientific frameworks such as implementation science and knowledge translation. This talk explores the vital role that the humanities can play in meeting this challenge, proposing a translational medical humanities approach to complement and enhance translational medical science.

The BRIGHT network

The keynote is organized by BRIGH, a group of researchers working within the field of social science and humanities in health at Aarhus University. The objective of BRIGHT is to be a state-of-the-art hub for medical humanities research and education in clinical medicine at Aarhus University and the Central Denmark Region.
